Career Guide for Consulting Careers

Introduction

Thank you for reviewing this guide to Career Planning for Consulting Careers. The Cohen Career Center is your partner in the educational process. We provide access to career development programs, services, connections, and resources, empowering you to pursue your post-graduate plans and navigate lifelong career changes. This guide offers specific strategies and resources for Consulting Careers. The Cohen Career Center partners with the Mason School of Business to provide targeted career advising resources for business students. As career development professionals, all members of the Cohen Career Center advising team are accessible to students from all majors and career interests. In addition to this generalist role, our staff members are also responsible for unique career verticals and industry liaison roles, such as Business Careers.

Core Competencies for Careers in Consulting

The National Association of Colleges and Employers (NACE) compiles research data from employers and recruiting professionals to determine the key career expectations for recent graduates. These core competencies are a list of skills required by a majority of employers hiring candidates for internship and entry level roles across industries and functional areas. The following infographic provides specific detail for each of the eight core competencies.

As you build your resume, draft your cover letter, and prepare for interviews, consider the following competencies as they relate to your specific background and experience. Employers are looking for candidates with the ability to articulate and/or demonstrate these skills. In addition to these comprehensive skills, following are specific recommendations for opportunities to highlight your skills to prospective employers as a student who minored in Management and Organizational Leadership or concentrated in Consulting.

- Build professional, clear resumes and compelling, well written cover letters.
- Utilize Executive Partners (EPs) and professors to learn more about the profession.

- Study abroad to develop an appreciation of other cultures and educational systems. Check with the Reves International Center for Studies for opportunities.
- Consider adding the official designation of “International Emphasis” to your BBA degree. Consult with the Undergraduate Business Office & the Business Majors Curriculum Guide for the requirements.
What should I be doing to get ahead?

TRIBE CAREERS
- TribeCareers is W&M’s jobs and internships database, where employers post their jobs, where you search for positions that interest you, and where you submit your applications. Make sure to update your profile, and upload the latest copy of your resume. Tribe Careers is where you also learn of upcoming events and RSVP for career panels and employer information sessions.

STAY INFORMED
- Business Careers Newsletter – Sign up to receive Cohen’s weekly newsletter through your Tribe Careers account.

STAY INVOLVED
- Consulting Club – The Consulting Club is a great way to get involved. They offer projects and practice case review as well as connections to consulting alumni. Sign up for their listserv to learn of their meetings, special events. To find the current point of contact, go to the TribeLink: https://tribelink.wm.edu/organization/consulting
- Case Competitions – many companies like Accenture offer opportunities to participate in case competitions. These are beneficial experiences that will introduce you to the field of consulting.

TAKE ADVANTAGE OF SPECIAL OPPORTUNITIES for students interested in Consulting
- Employer Tables & Informal Chats. During the FALL and SPRING semester, certain organizations sponsor employer tables in the Sadler lobby and Mason lobby. PwC’s table has a walk-up resume review in the Mason lobby. Deloitte reserves time for you to speak informally with their recruiter at The Daily Grind. Check your Tribe Careers account for when and where they will be on campus.
- Meet the Firms. Held every FALL semester, this half-day accounting career expo is co-sponsored by the Cohen Career Center and the Graduate Career Management Center (GCMC) in the Mason School. The morning consists of a series of career panels given by business professionals who discuss topics such as the different fields of consulting, and how to “ace a case” interview, among others. The afternoon involves an informal networking session where students can speak with employers and learn more about their organizations.

Other Resources

Learn more about the Consulting profession:
- Vault – Vault contains information on the Top 50 Consulting Firms plus career guides devoted to consulting. You can also find resources on Case Interviewing. (Access Vault from your Tribe Careers account by searching for the heading “External Job Resources”).
- ManagementConsulted.com – a good general website that covers topics about how to build a resume, why management consulting vs banking, and it also has a paid section for case interview prep etc.
- CaseInterview.com – similar to the above, gives good advice from an experienced consultant. He also has authored a helpful book, Case Interview Secrets.
- Hacking the Case Interview by Taylor Warfield – a good book with sound case interview prep advice
- Candid Careers – Watch short videos of individuals who work in the Consulting field. Hear directly from them on what a typical work day is like, pros and cons of the job, and their recommendations for young professionals. (Access Candid Careers from the Cohen website under the heading of Career/Major Exploration).
- O*NET Online – Read in-depth information on specific consulting areas. Learn about education requirements, employment trends, and average salaries on the national, state, and local level.
- MBA Casebooks - Many top-tier MBA consulting clubs create casebooks that provide mock case interviews that you can use to practice. Sometimes casebooks also include information about various consulting firms as well.

Professional Associations:
Professional associations serve as the formal organization for a profession. Professional associations set the standard for the industry. They also host workshops and webinars to meet the ongoing educational training. Students can often join associations at a discounted rate.
